HIGHLIGHTS

Dear Reader,

This past month, the gene editing arena has been quite effervescent!

Starting with Bayer's deal with Curevac through Casebia Therapeutics (Bayer-CRISPR Therapeutics joint venture) to develop novel Cas9 mRNA constructs with improved properties for in vivo gene-editing liver disease programs. CRISPR-Cas9 has generated a lot of excitement for its use in eliminating disease-causing irregularities in DNA, but other approaches are also explored by scientists.

Novartis renewed its commitment to gene and cell therapies beyond CART & CRISPR by signing a deal with upfront payment and equity investment with Homology Medicines to use its AMEnDR gene-editing technology. The resulting drugs aim for certain ophthalmic and hemoglobinopathy diseases. Lastly Locus Biosciences, armed with $19m in series A funding, is also moving ahead with a first clinical trial for its CRISPR-based antimicrobial drugs. Locus is the only company using a CRISPR-Cas3 system to tackle multidrug-resistant bacteria, while preserving the rest of the microbiome. On the academic side, the MIT has developed nanoparticles that could eliminate the need for viruses to edit genes. All these advances are very interesting and a promise to keep partnerships well going in the future.

On the public market front, biotech listings on Nasdaq remain strong this month. Denali Therapeutics and Odonate Therapeutics contemplate using the Wall Street's bullish sentiment momentum by filing for two big IPOs. Denali Therapeutics has been founded back in 2015 on a monster $217 million A round followed up with a $130 million series B, by a group of high-profile ex-Genentech executives, who held various positions in neuroscience department. The company focuses on neurodegenerative diseases like Alzheimer's disease, Parkinson's disease and ALS. Today it is looking for $100 million. For its part, Odonate Therapeutics the San Diego-based biotech founded in 2013, envisions pocketing $173 million for its work on oral chemotherapy drugs.

Last but not least, we are happy that with 24 companies and c. 100 attendees, the Bryan, Garnier & Co. Healthcare conference was, this year again, a great success! We look forward to meeting with you all again in November 2018 for our  $6^{\text{th}}$  edition. Thank you!

- News of the month: the US-FDA approved Nicox's Vyzulta (latanoprostene bunod) for the treatment of glaucoma and ocular hypertension
- Vyzulta's regulatory approval by the US authorities has not been uneventful, but Nicox and its partner Bausch+Lomb finally got the green light from the FDA. Vysulta's launch in the US is expected by the end of the year

- Raise of the month: Biocartis (oncology IVD) successfully raised €80m on the market, to expand its Idylla platform, and accelerate its sales and marketing activities
- On the private front, Xeltis, a clinical-stage medical device company pioneering a restorative approach in heart valve therapy, closed an oversubscribed €45m series C round of financing, the largest investment round for a European private Medtech company in 2017

- There were no major deals in Europe this month, as M&A activity pauses for breath
- Palatine-backed Vernacare, a company specialized in infection protection, acquired Synergy Health from US medical device company Steris. Synergy Health manufactures wound care and surgery products, as well as hygiene wipes. This acquisition will broaden Vernacare's range of products

CAR-T: no longer Science Fiction

CAR-T therapies have demonstrated some of the highest cure rates in history for late-stage cancer patients. However, they are plagued with controversy because of their early toxicity profile, manufacturing and cost. Hopefully, technology is evolving fast and safety protocols are reducing mortality. We see the next 12 months as data rich and believe investor confidence in this market will increase. Our take is that 2018 will lead to considerably more colour on the improved efficacy and safety of CAR-T. The first two CAR-T cell therapies, namely Novartis' Kymriah and Kite's Yescarta, have been approved for the treatment of ALL and DLBCL respectively, paving the way for additional new entrants. 2018 may be a good entry point for two further CAR-T approvals in DLBCL, such as Novartis' CTL019 and Juno's JCAR017. We are re-initiating Cellectis and Celyad.

- Tumours use many strategies to evade the host immune response, including downregulation or weak immunogenicity of target antigens and creation of an immune-suppressive tumour environment. T-cells play a key role in cell-mediated immunity and, recently, strategies to genetically modify T-cells either through altering the T cell receptor (TCR) specificity or through introducing antibody-like recognition in chimeric antigen receptors (CARs) have made substantial advances. As we believe TCRs are 1/riskier owing to fatal off-target toxicities and 2/too early stage compared with CAR-T, we focused this report on CAR-T cell therapy. After years of raising cash, IFOs, securing licensing rights from academia and starting numerous small studies, the race is on to generate hard clinical data. Moreover the sector has not been sitting on its hands as subsequent technical advances have been investigated to address some current challenges.
- T cells engineered to express CARs by gene transfer technology specifically recognize their target antigen in a simplified manner (antibody scFv-based, MHC independent), resulting in T cell activation. Starting with today's murine containing scFv containing products, future CAR products should feature fully human scFv, optimized to particular T-cell subsets, suicide/control switches and logic gates as well as an armamentarium of strategies that allow T cells to thrive in a hostile tumour environment. Autologous T-cells are the cornerstone of present cell-based cancer immunotherapies, but allogeneic cell sources, possibly including stem cell-deived "off-the-shelf" T-cells, are likely to play an important role in the future.
- Cellectis NEUTRAL FV EUR23: Seems affected by several issues: 1/UCART19 clinical program is progressing slowly and demonstrated disappointed preliminary clinical results; 2/ CD123 might be a dangerous target to use for CAR-T cell therapy; 3/GMP manufacturing problems might explain in part the delays that the company accumulate; 4/Other pre-clinical projects focus on Multiple Myeloma, which in our view is not a strategic indication to address, and these CAR-T product candidates are still too early stage to be included in our valuation model; 5/Lack of clinical data in 2018.
- Celyad EUY FV EUR58: Seems to have everything it takes to succeed.1/Celyad has a very differentiated approach with its autologous NKG2D CART, addressing both liquid (AML); and solid (colorectal) cancers; 2/Celyad is developing both autologous and allogeneic CAR-T cell therapies; 3/Despite its earlier development stage, Celyad has a robust patent estate validated by two structuring deals related to its allogeneic util CAR-T players interested in developing allogeneic CAR-T product candidates; 4/Has its own manufacturing infrastructure.
